The Philosophy of the Future which has cost the author more than half a century of toil , is a stout defense of the principle of Causation both against the philosophical scientists who, following Hume, would reduce cause to customary sequence among our sense-impressions, and against the subordination by many writers on logic of the notion of cause to that of reason or ground. To cancel causality is to efface all distinction between truth and falsehood. Scientia est cognoscere causas. The sole essential function of all thinking is to discriminate between cause and effect. There is no known form of thought which is not ultimately reducible into an assertion of cause and effect. From the vantage ground of this theorem, with its corollary that a cause cannot be known except through its effects, or an effect apart from its cause, Mr. Hebbard trains his guns upon the systems of Hume, Kant, Hegel, Mill, and other logical writers. He reviews successively Space, Time, the Concept, Judgment, and finally Induction, defined as the discovery of causal processes by means of physical and mental experiment, in the attempt to show that all categories are but species and derivative forms under the supreme and all-embracing category of causality. The logical discussion is followed by chapters on God, Freedom and the Soul, in which the metaphysical application of his principles is made. The causal concept is utilized to strengthen the ontological argument. The conception of a sufficient cause, fully understood, is identical with the theistic conception of God. This conception of a sufficient cause involves unity, infinitude, freedom and love (if an infinite being acts at all, or causes any changes, it...
