Excerpt: . . . this their birth-right, and to find it ratified by an express revelation. . At the same time, if we turn our thoughts inward upon ourselves, we may meet with a kind of secret sense concurring with the proofs of our own immortality. You have, in my opinion, raised a good presumptive argument from the increasing appetite the mind has to knowledge (N 1 1 1.), and to the extending its own faculties, which cannot be accomplished, as the more restrained perfection of lower creatures may, in the limits of a short life. I think another probable conjecture may be raised from our appetite to duration itself, and from a reflection on our progress through the several stages of it. He are complaining (as you observe in a former speculation No 93.) of being short of life, and yet are perpetually burrowing over the part: of it, to arrive at certain little stations, or imaginary points: of rest, which are divided up and dawn in it. Now let us consider what happens to us when we arrive at these imaginary points: of rest: do we stop our motion, and sit down satisfied in the settlement we have gained or are we not removing the boundary, and marking out new points of rest, to which we press forward with the like eagerness, and which cease to be such as fast as we attain them. Our case is like that...
