General hygienic measures and agreeable occupation, when permissible, are not neglected. IODINE IN SURGERY. F. E. Walker, in the Minnesota State Medical Journal, thus enumerates the advantages of iodine in surgical operation: 1st. The night before operation the patient has the usual full bath and thorough soap and water scrubbing of the part to be operated on, followed by cleansing with normal saline and alcohol. A dry sterile pad is then firmly applied. 2d. After the patient is placed on the operating-table and is under the anesthetic, the dry pad is removed and full strength tincture of iodine is well applied, the sterilized sheets and towels are arranged, and the operation is commenced. Full strength tincture is used in all cases and for all operations except within the vagina or the rectum. In these organs we use one-half iodine and one-half water. The advantage of our present method is-- 1st. The technic is simple. There are no wet pads, towels or dressings. The table and patient are...
