Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: . the child to its mother, to the aerial flights of war and peace. We see the instinct respond sometimes alone, oftentimes tied up with a dozen others. Why does baseball hold such a sway? Is it not because it contains as many of these instinctive activities as can well be crowded into one activity? Just as seeing and hearing are most individually manifest in early life so does team consciousness develop during early puberty. After the plotting of the duration and peaks of instinctive development, a mass of material for use throughout these periods must be assembled and made ready for use. This is a full-sized job and one that I presume is being worked out simultaneously at several schools and by many people. Just as important as the material is the laboratory for its use. We must have a place to put over a play program. Take the floor space within the school building, the playground space, add to that the home space, the waste street space and see what we could have had they been apportioned aright. There is enough waste space in nearly all our cities for the need had it been kept together. There must be space for the school and community use. The little park and the big city must be supplanted by the little city and the big park. The big school edging four streets must be a matter of history. There must be spaces for activities other than...
