BiblioGov. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 34 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in.GAO reviewed the effectiveness of the Armys general support (GS) maintenance strategy in meeting the expected support requirements of future conflicts. GAO found that: (1) although civilians regularly perform GS maintenance in peacetime, the Army expects its maintenance units to perform maintenance services during wartime; (2) the Armys GS maintenance strategy is ineffective, since it does not reflect the changed threat environment, existing military maintenance capabilities, and maintenance practices used during past conflicts; (3) the Army does not sufficiently train its military maintenance units during peacetime to perform repairs on some equipment; (4) although the Army has attempted to improve its maintenance capability, it had difficulty providing adequate training for its reserve units, since they have limited training time and access to repair mission-essential equipment; (5) most military GS units performed nonmaintenance tasks during the Persian Gulf war due to changes in deployment plans and theater priorities; (6) civilians significantly contributed to successful equipment maintenance during the Persian Gulf war, but the Army had problems with some civilians because it did not adequately screen for medical, physical, and emotional problems and there was some confusion over leave permission; and (7) the Army needs to revise its maintenance strategy to determine in which conflict situations experienced civilian maintenance personnel can be useful and integrated with military maintenance units.
